

After vacillating between a desire to report on something she already had half a clue on and a desire to do something really interesting, Brie discovered that she had no inspiration at all for writing about flats but was intrigued by spiral staircases. Unfortunately, this proved to be an overambitious topic, and since she has people in her lab group depending on her for something tomorrow which she hasn't even started, she is posting this lameass excuse instead. She will submit her tech note on spiral staircases once lab has stopped sucking her soul away.